Q: How do you get out of a resizable widget with a TreeWidget? What is the "standard" way to get out of a resizable widget? I'm not sure what should be my default size to or how to get to it. I'm writing a module that, like the one in the Squeak project, only has one available size (tree size). This is for my own convenience, it does not limit the size of the tree as default on most other widgets. I can get out of the window by lowering the size of it to the default of 0x0, and resizing up to whatever size is available, then back to 0x0. This is not the behavior that I want. In the same module, I use a TreeWidget. It works fine on its own. Now in the same window, I have added a resizable widget of size 0x0, after which I have added a TreeWidget. Now when I lower the size of the resizable widget to be larger than the size of the tree widget, the tree widget snaps back and does not resize back. How do I get out of the resizable widget? It appears my tree widget has some sort of vtable that is not being called when the resizable widget changes size. How do I get it to behave the same as when I add the TreeWidget to the window alone? A: The behaviour is normal. The TreeWidget is in general internally making a real resize call on itself, and being informed about the new size (by the resize widget) it will respond again. But maybe you are calling the tree resize explicitly. If so, that's a bug. If you want the behaviour you would have when the resize widget is not present, then remove the TreeWidget. Q: Selecting from a list of values So I have a table that has a row called lineitems. It has a field, productid, that is a foreign key reference to another table that has the id of the products with the same name. For example, I have several lines that reference different names of the same product. I want to be able to add more to this table as time goes by, but I want it to stay backwards compatible so that there is no need to change the field type from int to decimal or double or something else. But I need to be able to get the different rows of the same product. For example: lineitems: productid lineitem 1 1 1 2 1 5 2 1 2 3 In this case I want to be able to select all three lineitems of the same product because the productid 1 exists three times. Any ideas? Thanks A: Use group by: select p.productid, count(*) from product p join lineitem l on p.productid = l.productid group by p.productid having count(*) > 1; Notes: If you want to count the same product more than once, then you need a way to distinguish them. It is unclear whether you want the count to be distinct products or lines. I do this whenever I need to divide a page into two pieces. The technique comes from a tutorial on the Poser 101 website. I always split the top, or upper part, first as well. It helps to turn it around and rotate it 90 degrees, in that case. This gives you a 45 degree line to slice along. Then I go to File...Step and click on the box to insert my cue object. In this case it was a poly. Always use your cue object as a virtual guide. I took it to a verity of cutting heights and brought
